How did Will Honeycomb entertain women?

In Richard Steele's (1671-1729) portrayal of Will Honeycomb from The Spectator Club, Honeycomb is depicted as the embodiment of "a well-bred gentleman". He has expertly navigated the social and fashionable circles of his time. Honeycomb entertained women in the following manner.

Charming Gentleman: Will Honeycomb entertained women with charm, fashion knowledge, and lively stories. He always dressed very well and took great care of his appearance, which made him attractive to women. Steele describes Honeycomb in the following manner:

He has all his life dressed very well, and remembers habits as others do men. He can smile when one speaks to him, and laughs easily.

Conversational Skills:

He had a talent for making women feel special by talking to them about exciting topics they enjoyed. Steele writes about Honeycomb -

He is very ready at that sort of discourse with which men usually entertain women.

Honeycomb could easily smile and laugh, making his conversations light and enjoyable. He often shared amusing anecdotes about romantic adventures at the royal court, adding excitement to his stories.

Fashionable Insights: Honeycomb knew all about the latest styles and trends. He also remembered many details about past fashion trends and could recall which famous women wore certain styles. This made his conversations rich with historical and fashionable insights.

To wrap up, Honeycomb was sweet, like honey to women. His ability to mix knowledge with a playful manner made him very popular with them. He could entertain them with his charm and his stories.
