How would you compare the summer in Bangladesh with the summer described in the poem?

The beauty and brightness of summer: Summer is a season of beauty and brightness. But it can also bring challenges like heat and storms. Shakespeare's (1564-1616) Sonnet 18 (1609) paints a picture of an English summer, which is short and mild. On the other hand, summer in Bangladesh is long, hot, and humid. Let us see how these two summers are different.

Summer in Shakespeare's Sonnet 18: In the poem, summer is beautiful but short. It is full of life, with blooming flowers and sunny days. However, it is not perfect. Strong winds shake the buds of May, and the sun can become too hot. Summer's beauty fades quickly, as it only lasts a short time. Shakespeare uses summer as a symbol of natural beauty, but he says that it does not last forever.

Summer in Bangladesh: The summer in Bangladesh is very different. It is long and extremely hot. The temperature often rises above 35 degrees Celsius. People sweat a lot, and the heat is uncomfortable. Sometimes, there are storms called nor'westers, which bring strong winds and rain. Farmers look forward to rain for their crops, but heavy storms can cause damage. Summer in Bangladesh also brings delicious fruits like mangoes and jackfruits.

In Shakespeare's sonnet, summer is gentle but short. In Bangladesh, summer is harsh but full of life. The poem describes an ideal world, while Bangladesh's summer reflects the challenges of real life. Both remind us of nature's beauty and power.
