

Write about the tone and Authors position in the poem

"London, 1802".

Generated: Jan 26, 2026

Write about the tone and Authors position in the poem "London, 1802".

In the poem "London, 1802" (1807) by William Wordsworth (1770-1850), shares his thoughts in a strong and emotional way. He is unhappy about the current state of England and calls on John Milton, a famous poet from the past, to help make things better. Let's explore the tone of the poem and Wordsworth's views.

Tone- Sad and Optimistic: The tone of the poem is both sad and hopeful. Wordsworth is sad about how England is now. He calls it a "fen of stagnant waters." This means everything feels stuck and dirty. He is disappointed. But he also has hope. He believes that if John Milton, a great poet, were alive, he could help. Wordsworth thinks Milton's virtues could make England great again.

Author's Position- Subjective: Wordsworth's view in the poem is very personal. He talks directly to Milton with words like "thou" and "thee." It feels like he is writing a letter. He shares his own feelings and wishes. He really wants Milton to return and help. By calling on Milton, Wordsworth shows he likes old values like honesty, freedom, and strength. He wants these good qualities to return and help England get better.

In short, Wordsworth's poem mixes sadness with hope. He is unhappy with England's state but thinks it can get better. His personal touch makes the poem moving. It shows how deeply he cares about his country.