Write a summary of the poem "To Autumn".

"To Autumn" (1820) is a beautiful poem by John Keats (1795-1821). It celebrates the beauty, peace, and richness of the autumn season. The poet shows autumn as a time of abundance, calmness, and preparation for winter. The poem is full of lovely images of nature. Keats brings autumn to life and makes us feel its beauty.

The poem begins by describing autumn as a season of plenty. The sun and autumn work together to ripen fruits and fill nature with life. The vines are full of ripe fruits, apples bend the trees, and hazelnuts become plump. Autumn provides food and sweetness for everyone, including the bees. Everything seems complete and perfect.

In the middle part of the poem, autumn is shown resting peacefully. The poet imagines autumn as a figure sitting and enjoying the season. Autumn is not in a hurry but waits as the crops are harvested. The quietness and stillness of autumn create a sense of peace.

In the final part, the poet focuses on the sounds of autumn. He talks about the songs of crickets, the soft whistles of birds, and the buzzing of insects. These sounds show that autumn is alive and full of activity, even as winter is near.

The poem captures the beauty and joy of autumn with simple, clear words. It shows how autumn is both the end of one cycle and the start of another.
