

A Dialogue Between the Soul and Body Summary

Writer: William Butler Yeats | Generated: Jan 26, 2026

In this poem, the soul of the poet tells the poet to climb up the winding stairs. Then go up to the very top to fix the purity of thought through the star that is there. The poet here exhorts himself to work hard to find knowledge, learning, and truth. The soul also says that heavenly happiness lies in meditation for the eternal world. It reveals the truth. And through this, our hearts are filled. However, despite all the hardships and cruel truths, the poet is sincerely accepting the life of the world, leaving aside the ascetic life and escapism.
