Sir Roger de Coverley: Sir Roger is an old-fashioned, kind, and much-loved landlord. He always helped the poor and stood up for justice, like when he risked his health to assist a widow at the county sessions. He was generous, giving gifts and pensions to his servants and kindness to everyone in the parish. Sir Roger loved his traditions, cared about others more than himself. He was honest and gentle to everyone. Even when dying, he thought about others, leaving special gifts to his loved ones, the chaplain, and all villagers. His loss was deeply felt by his friends, his servants, the poor, and even his dog. Sir Roger's life showed goodness, loyalty, and a desire to help everyone around him.

Edward Biscuit (The Butler): The butler is loyal, emotional, and devoted to Sir Roger. He writes about Sir Roger's death with deep sadness and details all the kind things Sir Roger did for his servants and the poor. He is honest, simple in his words, and shows how much the household truly loved their master.

Captain Sentry: Sir Roger's nephew and heir. Captain Sentry is quiet, polite, and tries to honor his uncle's memory by caring for what Sir Roger loved—like being kind to the old house-dog and the servants.

Sir Roger's Chaplain: The chaplain appreciated Sir Roger's goodness and often praised him. He was so moved by Sir Roger's death that he cried whenever he spoke of him. Sir Roger rewarded the chaplain in his will for loyalty and kindness.
