"Deep bruises mottled her back and stomach." – (The Fruit of My Woman, Part 1)

Explanation: The husband first notices dark marks on his wife's body. These bruises show her hidden pain and the beginning of her strange change.

"Her entire body was dark green." – (Part 6)

Explanation: When the husband returns from his trip, he finds his wife fully changed. Her green body shows that she has become one with nature.

"There's actually no sensation at all in the bruised parts." – (Part 1)

Explanation: The wife says she cannot feel anything where the bruises are. This shows her loss of emotion and disconnection from the human world.

"As soon as I see the sunlight, I get the urge to take my clothes off." – (Part 2)

Explanation: The wife feels drawn to sunlight. Her body wants to be free and close to nature.

"The sun's rays penetrating my bared flesh were so much like your scent." – (Part 7)

Explanation: The wife compares sunlight to her mother's scent. This shows her longing for warmth, love, and a return to the womb-like comfort of nature.

"I lined the small flowerpots up next to that of my withered wife." – (Part 8)

Explanation: After her death, the husband plants her fruits in new pots. It shows love, memory, and the start of new life.

“Soon, I know, even thought will be lost to me, but I’m alright. I’ve dreamed of this, of being able to live on nothing but wind, sunlight and water, for a long time now.” – (Part 7)

Explanation: The wife accepts her change peacefully. She is ready to live only on nature’s elements — air, light, and water. This shows her final freedom.
