Quotes

"Lay your sleeping head, my love, human on my faithless arm."

Explanation:

The poem opens with this tender invitation. The poet asks the beloved to rest peacefully on his arm. The words "human" and "faithless" show that love accepts imperfection. The poet's love is sincere, gentle, and deeply human.

"Mortal, guilty, but to me the entirely beautiful."

Explanation:

The poet admits that his beloved is mortal and imperfect, like all humans, yet to him entirely beautiful. The line expresses love that accepts flaws and finds holiness in human weakness.

"Beauty, midnight, vision dies: Let the winds of dawn that blow softly round your dreaming head."

Explanation: The poet reminds us that beauty and dreams fade with time, but the dawn brings new hope and renewal. It shows peace and forgiveness even in life's passing moments.

Moral Lesson: The poem teaches that true love accepts imperfection and time. Even though beauty fades and life is short, love makes the moment holy. Real love is gentle, forgiving, and full of peace.
