God's Creation and Praise: The poem shows how the poet feels happy and thankful for all the different and colorful things in nature. He praises God for making everything beautiful, even things that look strange or mixed up.

Beauty in Variety and Imperfection: The poet tells us that beauty is not only in perfect or plain things. Even things with spots, colors, and different shapes are beautiful. This theme teaches us to love and respect all kinds of things in the world, no matter how different they are.
